of the present invention to provide a plurality of grounded power supplies for VCSELs, so that the grounded power supplies can be cascaded together for providing a high voltage power supply. Each of the two power supplies can supply a low voltage power supply of different supply voltage through the VCSELs so that the two power supplies can share the plurality of VCSELs. Furthermore, a maintenance voltage for the VCSELs can be provided by either of the plurality of grounded power supplies. In addition, an automatic start-up voltage can be provided to each of the VCSELs which are in the operation. According to still another aspect of the present invention, there is provided a method for driving a plurality of VCSELs. The plurality of VCSELs includes a first group of VCSELs that are connected to a first grounded power supply for providing a low voltage power supply, and a second group of VCSELs that are connected to a second grounded power supply for providing a high voltage power supply. A direct current voltage is supplied to a cathode of each of the first group of VCSELs, and the high voltage power supply is connected to a corresponding cathode of each of the second group of VCSELs. The first group of VCSELs include a first group of VCSELs which are operated at a first level of brightness and having a first voltage, and a second group of VCSELs which are operated at a second level of brightness and having a second voltage. The method includes the steps of driving each of the plurality of VCSELs by operating the second group of VCSELs at the second level of brightness and supplying the high voltage power supply to the corresponding cathode, and while operating each of the first group of VCSELs at the first level of brightness and supplying the low voltage power supply to the corresponding cathode.
