Tall Tensions is the only location for urban wear. Our clothes is designed for on-the-go lifestyle of the busy metropolitan. See all stores London by categories. About us About us. The present invention is directed to a system and method for treating emissions from an internal combustion engine, and more specifically, to a system and method for treating engine emissions by modifying a combustion system to incorporate a thermal catalyst which, in combination with engine modifications and fresh air intake, substantially reduces emissions. Under typical operating conditions, engine exhaust gases exit the engine as pollutants which are discharged into the atmosphere. These pollutants include hydrocarbons (HC), carbon monoxide (CO), and nitrogen oxides (NO_x). To meet governmental regulations, various treatments to reduce the amount of these pollutants in engine emissions have been developed. Typical treatments include the use of a catalytic converter in the exhaust system, selective catalytic reduction of CO and NO_x on the catalyst, and reduction of HCs on the catalyst. To be effective at all three reduction reactions, the catalyst is commonly referred to as a three-way catalyst. Catalytic converters have been employed in vehicles since about the mid-1960's. In its simplest form, a three-way catalyst contains a substrate, such as cordierite, which is doped to improve the adsorption and reduction of CO and HCs, and oxidize NO to NO₂. In more sophisticated forms of three-way catalysts, an oxide, such as oxides of vanadium, molybdenum and tungsten, along with other elements, are dispersed on the substrate. A typical composition for a vanadium oxide-based three-way catalyst is given by the formula $x\text{MoO}_3 + x\text{V}_2\text{O}_5$, where x can range from 2 to 3 depending upon the composition. In its preferred form, the vanadium oxide is dispersed on a carrier, such as alumina, and alloyed with a precious metal, such as platinum. A typical three-way catalyst includes 15-20% weight of the precious metal. The three-way catalyst is placed in the engine exhaust system to optimize the reduction of HC, CO and NO_x. During steady-state operation, an engine operates with a steady state of exhaust constituents, such as, for
