Although the app doesn't claim to be an HTML editor, it still provides a lot of functions which are considered indispensable for HTML authors. The application includes all features we've come to know and love, including WYSIWYG editor, code coloring, and auto-completion, but also provides a few new things. In particular, it's the first Flash editor that shows you the HTML structure of your page without de-compressing it. EZFlash also comes with a built-in module that generates font images in different formats (SVG, PNG, and PDF), and can generate skeleton pages for developers. Although the app can't generate CSS right now, it can generate basic HTML. There are quite a few other tricks provided by the app, which include built-in file viewer with FTP import and export, page and gallery builder, code inspection, color panel, and more. EZFlash can be downloaded directly from CNET with a free trial. Once downloaded, users will have to register for the full version.
